THE SILENT KILLER

(As this fast world is passing us by, stop for just a minute. Here is something that concerns both you and me. Listen and you will learn that we do not know of everything that is showing on the outside, but yet what's on the inside is what counts, but is what also can really bring us down. By the author)

"THE SILENT KILLER"
There's a dreadful killer in our world today;
It's not a he or she, or anything in that act or way.

It get us when we least expect it;
It takes us when we think its corrected.

This killer I'm referring to, is not liked to be talked about;
it's called the "silent killer", but oh the pain it brings out.

It's something you can't explain; and boy when you hear its name;
The explanation you get is like a puzzled game.

We always have the question "why?";
Ha, it's funny, there's no reply.

You can say you feel sorry for someone who's got it;
But you never know how it is until you're got it.

Or even if it's not you that gets it, but someone you love dearly;
A part of the pain is with you yearly.

We never know what they think or feel;
We only hope before it come to us, it will make a big yield.

My prayers go out to you that have it;
I know how it is, it's in my family.

To most of you, I don't have to answer;
I think you know, I'm talking about Cancer.

A Becentennial Salute

A unique and remarkably detailed series of dioramas saluting American independence will be presented by the Va. Dept. of Transportation at the Historic Appomattox Railroad Festival on oct. 16-17, 1976.

Representing many hours of research and painstaking labor, it highlights some of the most memorable moments of Virginia's participation in our nation's fight for independence, and it does so with imagination and great visual appeal.

All the models, which are built to scale, are animated. In the Virginia Gazette scene, there is movement indicating the washing of paper and inking of the press and the setting of type. In the blockade and battle scenes, ships rock and flashing lights indicate gunfire. In St. John's Church, Patrick Henry raises an arm as one of the patriots turns his head towards him. And in the surrender scene, Major Benjamin Lincoln, acting for George Washington, reaches out to accept the sword offered by Brigadier General Charles O'Hara, General Cornwallis' representative, as a regimental flag in the background is raised.

The dioramas are mounted against a background of weathered-looking, gray barnboard panelling and are set off with a rustic looking, red mahogany fence hand made by the model shop.

The display, which takes three or four hours to assemble has been shown at the Virginia State Fair and South Central Fair.

Other exhibits at the Railroad Festival will include Civil War artifacts, and railroadiana.

THE 'PHANTOM'STRIKES

With car threfts estimated at approximately one million per year, an auto owner must be just as shrewd as the would-be thieves.

The St. Louis Post Dispatch reports that two businessmen in that city recently initiated a buddy system to thwart thieves. Each morning the two men park next to each other at a downtown parking lot. They then drag out a heavy chain and padlock their cars together. Both men carry keys to the lock in case one wants to make an early exit.

So far, the challenge of the tandem auto theft has been proven too great for the St. Louis thieves and both cars have remained secure while many around them have disappeared.

Both men are pleased with their system except for the "phantom" of the parking lot - a joker who occasionally immobilizes them both by adding additional locks to the chain.
